
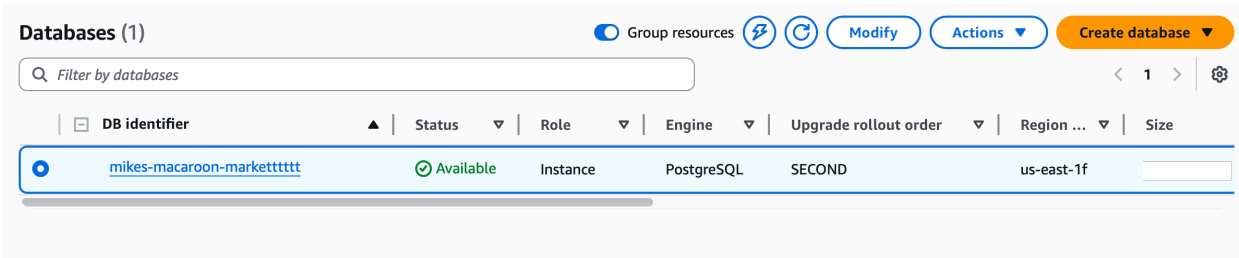
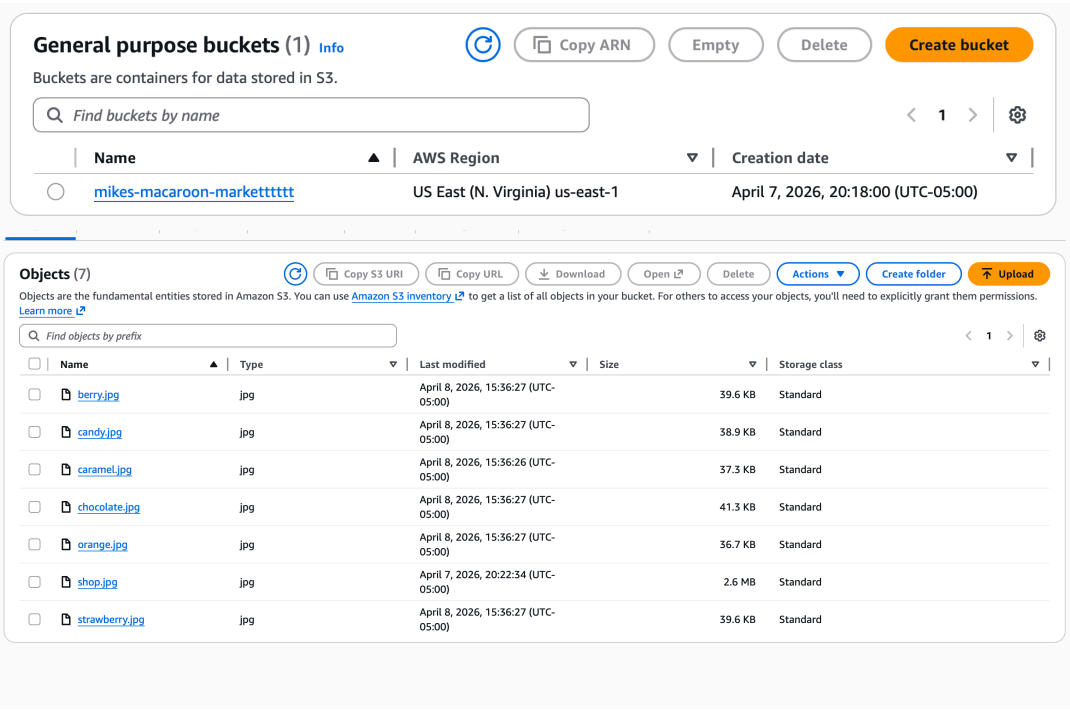
In the above image it shows the creation of my instance and it shows that it is running which is needed for the website to function.



In the image above it shows the creation of my database using PostgreSQL, and it held information such as price and product.



Here is the data I added to the S3 bucket, and it is where the instance was able to pull from. At first I ran into the problem of the original code not displaying the images, but shortly realized I had to add those images into the S3 bucket with the names corresponding with the code.
